HELL-BENT ON NUCLEAR WAR

Three months ago Trump announced that the United States would withdraw from the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces Treaty signed by Ronald Reagan and Mikhail Gorbachev in 1987. Trump and his chickenhawk sidekick, John Bolton, alleged that the Russians had violated the treaty by testing a new cruise missile. The Russians countered that Americans had cheated first.

The sane thing would have been to renegotiate the agreement and strengthen it. But treaties of all kinds have become Trump's favorite toilet paper—if it's not a deal the Big Dealer made himself, then it's flushed down the crapper. Vice President Mike Pence even suggested that the U.S. would not rule out deploying nuclear weapons in outer space, though that kind of mad escalation is outlawed by the Outer Space Treaty signed in 1967. Pence's statement came on the heels of Trump's proposal for a new addition to our hyper-bloated military, a Space Force.

Fifty years ago most of the world's nations signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, pledging to pursue the total eradication of nuclear weapons. Reagan fostered considerable progress with START (the Strategic Arms Reduction Treaty), initiated in the 1980s, but now the Republicans who worship him have totally reversed course, hell-bent on making a nuclear apocalypse likely, if not inevitable. George W. Bush first slammed the gears into reverse in 2001, when he announced that the U.S. would withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. And we've been going backward ever since, with plans to spend $1 trillion on new nuclear weapons over the next 30 years.

With an ignorant narcissist and serial liar as head of state, this new arms race is especially dangerous. Before the midterm elections Trump used the Republicans' favorite tactics—outright lies and fear-mongering—to get out the vote. He stoked groundless fears about the "invasion" of "criminal" migrants and "Middle Easterners" heading for our southern border, claimed Democrats would not protect people with preexisting health conditions and warned of a stock market crash and "violence" if his party lost their House majority.

With Democrats now in control of the House, Trump's whole regressive domestic agenda will get a much-needed check. That could push him to exercise unrestrained power in the arena of foreign policy, where Congress has almost totally abdicated its authority in the last two decades. Whenever an American President's poll numbers hit rock bottom, the surest cure is to lob some missiles at a hapless Third World country.

Don't put it past Trump to do the same—or worse, start a war with Iran, North Korea or China just as the 2020 election is on the horizon. Few countries will risk changing leaders in a time of war, and he knows this. The danger now is that, with nuclear weapons proliferating again, such a war could easily spiral out of control.

There is an important lesson in all this: Congress must reassert its sole Constitutional authority to go to war. With a man like Trump in the White House, reclaiming that power is more important now than ever.

MAJOR CIVIL RIGHTS TRIUMPH

FLORIDA LIBERALS AND CONSERVATIVES UNITE ON ELECTION DAY TO RESTORE EX-CONS' RIGHT TO VOTE.

Mainstream media has a difficult time covering good news. While there wasn't much of that in the mixed results of a deeply divided midterm electorate nationwide, one pure bright light of decency and common sense emerged. That is the decision of more than 60% of Florida voters to amend their state constitution, restoring voting rights to felons after completing all terms of their sentences, except for those convicted of murder or a felony sexual offense.

That's a sudden emancipation proclamation for nearly 1.5 million Floridians, 21% of them African-American, who paid their debt to society, but were denied the right to vote. (An estimated 4.5 million ex-felons are similarly banned from voting in 12 other states.) The breakthrough in Florida was a huge civil rights victory, particularly since its electorate chose conservative Republicans for the governor's office and U.S. Senate.

Even though the United States has the largest prison population in the entire world, the subject of prisoners' rights doesn't draw much attention from either major political party. Ironically, in recent years support for reform—such as less stringent sentencing guidelines, prisoner rehabilitation and protection of civil rights for released prisoners—has come as energetically from conservatives as from their liberal adversaries.

That certainly was the case in Florida. The American Civil Liberties Union of Florida deserves credit for drafting the voting rights petition, but it garnered considerable support from Libertarians, Tampa Bay Young Republicans, Catholic bishops and many others in putting Amendment 4 on the November 2018 ballot and attaining voter approval.

For almost 100 years the ACLU has defended citizens' rights even when many of those citizens were indifferent or even hostile to the cause. Few humanitarian causes are as controversial as the rights of prisoners, despite the fact we are so quick to condemn other nations as barbaric with regard to their incarceration and capital punishment practices.

When China or Russia or Egypt throws people in prison or executes them, we slam their human rights violations, but not so in this country. Here law and order is the byword to excuse a prison system heavily biased against the poor, the black and the brown.

As the respected Sun Sentinel editorialized in support of Amendment 4, "Florida's lifetime disenfranchisement [of felons] is deeply rooted in post-slavery racism...and serves no purpose except voter suppression."

This racial and class bias is clearly manifest in the makeup of any ex-con population. Despite the fact that those newly re-enfranchised may represent future votes for the more progressive political party, plenty of conservatives in the Sunshine State voted yes on Amendment 4 on Election Day.

"This victory is the culmination of decades of hard work," proclaimed Howard Simon, ACLU of Florida's executive director. "For too long, Florida has been an extreme outlier—our state's lifetime voting ban was the single most powerful voter suppression tactic in the country, shutting more people out of the voting booth and out of our democracy than any other single law or policy in the country."

It took more than two years to gather the 766,200 petition signatures to get Amendment 4 on the ballot, and support came immediately from prominent and consistent liberals. Vermont's Senator Bernie Sanders called it "a potential civil rights triumph: It could enfranchise more people at once than any single initiative since women's suffrage."

But what pushed the amendment over the finish line was the support of equally principled conservatives, most notably Mark Holden, a top executive at Koch Industries. As chairman of the influential nonprofit organization Freedom Partners, he rallied Chamber of Commerce support for the initiative. "We believe that when individuals have served their sentences and paid their debts as ordered by a judge," Holden stated, "they should be eligible to vote. If we want people returning to society to be productive, law-abiding citizens, we need to treat them like full-fledged citizens."

The good news, and we sure need it in these mean-spirited and deeply demonizing times, is that 5,146,993 Floridians—64.54% of those who voted—found the wisdom and decency to take a stand for second chances and the redemption of those who have gone astray. Improbable as it seems, if that many sensible voters in Florida are ready to risk treading the course of compassionate justice, maybe America can indeed become great again. H

THIS NUMBER IS NO LONGER IN SERVICE

PUBLIC SAFETY IS NEGLECTED AS TRUMP AND THE GOP GUT DECADES OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS RULES.

There are a lot of scams in the Republican Party's toolbox. One of the most insidious is the notion that cutting regulatory red tape is somehow meant to help you, the little guy, being held back by Big Government bureaucracy. But the Donald Trump/GOP Jedi mind tricks aren't meant to help you unless you're one of their big corporate donors. That would mean you're probably partying on your yacht or living it up with your third trophy wife at a Trump golf resort, instead of reading this.

When the GOP talks about doing away with job-killing regulations, it's out to scrap rules intended to keep you and your family from being poisoned, killed or ripped off by companies seeking to increase profits. Sure, you may die or lose your money if those protections are removed, but that CEO's new private jet ain't gonna buy itself, sucker!

Another reminder of deadly deregulation surfaced when Hurricane Michael ripped through Florida's Panhandle in October 2018. Tens of thousands of residents were left without power, food and something Americans take for granted: reliable telephone service. Even during and after disasters, copper wire landlines usually remain functional or are quickly restored. Well, at least they used to be.

Thanks to deregulation by Republican officials pretending to help you, that peace of mind has been blown away along with coastal homes and seafood shacks in the Sunshine State's obliterated towns of Mexico Beach and Panama City.

Weeks after Michael, hundreds of people in rural areas were still unaccounted for because phone service hadn't been restored. Many were elderly, disabled, impoverished or living alone, often miles from their nearest neighbor. Power lines were down, and cell service was spotty. Traditional lifelines were no longer operational. Officials conceded it would be weeks or months before service was fully restored.

Telecom companies once had a legal responsibility to quickly restore lifesaving landline phone service. Not anymore. Not in Florida. Shortly after taking office, Republican Governor Rick Scott signed the Regulatory Reform Act of 2011. Harold Feld of the nonpartisan advocacy group Public Knowledge labeled it "one of the most radical deregulations in the country."

Feld told me, "That act was a complete deregulation of the telephone industry in Florida. It removed the state Public Service Commission from any sort of jurisdiction over residential telephone service. It removed something called Carrier of Last Resort, which means there always has to be a telephone provider in the area.… The effect was to ensure that there was no plan for preparation, no oversight" and, after Michael hit, "no method of reporting who has telephone service and who doesn't."

There has been similar deregulation of the telecom industry in mostly GOP-controlled states in recent decades, but Florida's pro-business (read anticonsumer) measure was anything but conservative. It was radical and deadly.

As Feld explained, access for all has been "a fundamental value of our communications laws, basically since the founding of the republic.… We, as a country, want to be able to communicate with each other. We think it's important for commerce, for emergencies. And we've carried that tradition through each upgrade of our communication network—when we went from letters to the telegraph, from the telegraph to the telephone. The problem is we have not done that as we've moved from the telephone to broadband and wireless services.… We've gotten rid of the regulation on the copper network without replacing it with any kind of backstop."

Feld's concerns crystalized in 2012 after Hurricane Sandy killed over 140 in America's Northeast and knocked out landline service in some areas. Deciding that its future profits would come from expanded cellular service, Verizon opted to not restore copper wire lines in designated areas, leaving many without access to alarm systems, medical monitoring services, credit card billing, collect calling and the internet.

Then-President Barack Obama's Federal Communications Commission (FCC) responded by conducting hearings on the catastrophe-related failures of the telecom industry's infrastructure. "Over several years," Feld told me, "the FCC put rules in place to clarify that if your network is destroyed in a disaster, then you either have to restore service in a reasonable period of time, or…[demonstrate] the new network you propose to build in its place is going to be as good or better. Not repairing was not an option."

Then came Trump and his promise to deregulate everything, particularly anything Obama had mandated. While a commissioner on Obama's FCC, Ajit Pai scoffed at the "Chicken Little...sky is falling" concerns of Feld and other experts while post-Sandy rules were adopted. Once Pai became chairman under Trump, giving Republicans a majority, the FCC gutted some regulations in 2017 and killed more public-safety-related rules for telecom companies in 2018 just before Hurricane Michael hit. These are just some of the "gifts" of GOP deregulation.

Public Knowledge is now suing to restore federal rules trashed by Trump's FCC. I asked Feld if he thought the devastation caused by Michael might convince Trump's deregulation warriors to reverse the rollbacks. Feld told me, "The response from Chairman Pai was the usual 'How dare you politicize a tragedy and point out how our policies have contributed to this tragedy. Shame on you!'"

If you live in Florida, don't complain about anything to state officials. The 2011 deregulation, Feld noted, "even removed the ability of the Public Service Commission to take complaints from consumers." But, hey, at least we got rid of all of that bureaucratic red tape, right? H

KEVIN McCARTHY

California is mostly a liberal, blue state, dotted with a few pockets of deep-red conservatism. One of them is the San Joaquin Valley, dubbed "way west Texas" for its right-wing politics. The district includes Bakersfield, known for its dominant oil industry and god-awful air quality, ranking third worst in the country for yearly particle pollution. This foul air and reeking politics spawned Republican congressman Kevin McCarthy—Trump's leading hatchet man in Congress.

Unlike many other GOP leaders, who jumped on the Trump bandwagon only after he landed in the Oval Office, McCarthy was a codependent Asshole from the get-go: After the Access Hollywood tape scandal during the campaign, wherein Trump bragged about grabbing women's pussies, many Republicans distanced themselves, but McCarthy bit his tongue and remained loyal. Ever since Trump has called him "my Kevin."

And that he has been, voting to spearhead Trump's idiotically regressive agenda 98.9% of the time. Rolling back Dodd-Frank regulations designed to prevent another Wall Street economic meltdown? Check. Voting against allowing veterans access to medical marijuana even when pot's legal in their state? Check. Opposing putting DACA (Dreamers) protections into law? Check. Reauthorizing warrantless government spying as part of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act? Check.

McCarthy was a leader in the House passage of the American Health Care Act (AHCA), the ill-conceived bill hatched to "repeal and replace" Obamacare. The Affordable Care Act was partly modeled after a Massachusetts law instituted by Republican governor Mitt Romney, following proposals by the conservative Heritage Foundation. Yet it's now portrayed as some loony idea from the Left, because McCarthy and his fellow lobby whores are deep in the pockets of Big Pharma bloodsuckers. They do not give a flying fuck about improving a healthcare system ranked the most expensive—yet dead last in access, efficiency and outcomes—compared to 11 other industrialized nations, including Australia, Sweden, Canada and Germany.

More than 80,000 people in McCarthy's district were covered by the Affordable Care Act, and they raised howls of protest outside his local office as The Bakersfield Californian editorialized that the AHCA "would have devastating implications for the community." McCarthy's response? He stopped going to town hall meetings.

Equally devastating has been McCarthy's environmental voting record. The League of Conservation Voters gives him a dismal lifetime score of 3%. He's been Trump's point man to gut Obama's Clean Power Plan, has used the Congressional Review Act to repeal numerous sensible Obama-era environmental regulations, and was the primary author of the Wilderness and Roadless Area Release Act, which would have removed 60 million acres of public land from protected status—"the most radical, overreaching attempt to dismantle the architecture of our public land laws," according to former Secretary of the Interior Bruce Babbitt. Like his Ignoramus-in-Chief boss, McCarthy believes climate change is a hoax, even as record-setting wildfires made California look like a hellish inferno—not in July, but in freaking November! Bakersfield hasn't burned yet, but climate change is turning it into a tinderbox.

Speaking of fires, McCarthy's pants are as flammable as the drought-stricken Golden State. Recent whoppers include his insistence that the caravan of migrants marching toward our sacred southern border contained MS-13 gang members (with absolutely no evidence). Days before the deadly shooting at the Tree of Life synagogue, he tweeted that George Soros, along with other Jewish billionaires, was trying to "buy" the midterm elections. Conveniently, McCarthy didn't mention conservative Jewish billionaire Sheldon Adelson, who flooded Republican coffers with a record $100-plus million for the same election. To deter the threat of brown-skinned immigrants diluting the Republicans' lily-white base, McCarthy introduced legislation to fully fund Trump's ludicrous border wall and punish sanctuary cities harboring immigrants.

When he's not regurgitating bald-faced lies, McCarthy occasionally blurts out the naked truth, such as his September 2015 gaffe about the Benghazi witch hunt, portrayed as a nonpolitical investigation: "Everybody thought Hillary Clinton was unbeatable, right? But we put together a Benghazi special committee, a select committee. What are her numbers today? Her numbers are dropping." Or his blunt confession to a group of fellow Republicans, that he later tried to dismiss as an awkward joke: "There's two people I think Putin pays: [Dana] Rohrabacher and Trump. Swear to God." Thanks for the bumbling candor, Kevin!

Then there's the baseless conspiracy theory that Kevin loves to promote: The media tech giants—Google, Facebook and Twitter—are deliberately suppressing conservative viewpoints. As "evidence," McCarthy posted a screenshot of a tweet from conservative pundit Laura Ingraham that wasn't visible because it included "potentially sensitive content." Vile censorship! he bellowed. Only it wasn't; as many Twitter users pointed out, it was a privacy setting in his account responsible for the warning message. All he had to do was uncheck a preferences box. Dozens of left-wing websites and social media users have also complained about declining traffic and shadowbanning in the internet giants' efforts to curtail "fake news"—it's a problem, but it's a nonpartisan problem.

In 2015, long before his party lost the House majority in the midterms, McCarthy had lobbied for the powerful speaker position, but was stymied by rumors of an extramarital affair with family values GOP representative Renee Ellmers. Conservative megadonor Steve Baer sent emails to members of Congress, including McCarthy, alleging the tryst. Soon after, Representative Walter Jones penned a letter to a high-ranking House Republican stating that any candidates for speaker with "misdeeds" should bail out of the race. McCarthy's withdrawal from consideration the very next day leads one to suspect that he's yet another in a long list of GOP hypocrites who masquerade as Christian conservatives while they fuck around like rabbits.

Likewise, the same hypocrites forever wailing about wasting taxpayer money often turn out to be some of the worst abusers, McCarthy among them. In 2012 his office spent a shocking $99,000 on pastries, coffee, water and other snacks, more than anyone else in the House. Nearly 100 grand for fucking donuts? Now, that's fiscal restraint!

Now that he's been demoted to minority leader, the man is going to need more than donuts and Aquafina to get through the next two years. More like gallons of vodka and antidepressants, because with the Democrats controlling the House comes subpoena power, and no doubt they are finally going to flush out the whole constipated sewer of Trump's secret business life, including the crown jewels, his tax returns. McCarthy will be like Davy Crockett flailing an empty musket on the overrun walls of the Alamo. It couldn't happen to a more deserving jerk—after Obama was elected, McCarthy led the charge to obstruct, insisting, "We've gotta challenge them on every single bill and challenge them on every single campaign." What goes around, comes around. Payback's a bitch, Asshole!

"But obviously we've got to stand with our North Korean allies." —SARAH PALIN, FAILED POLITICIAN, SUCCESSFUL IDIOT

THE POLITICS OF PORN

It's common knowledge that our government is overrun by alien lizard monsters and political affiliations mean less as we march headlong into the New World Order. But insofar as porn preference, it's curious to see how both parties lean when it comes to their favorite fuck flicks and sex fantasies.

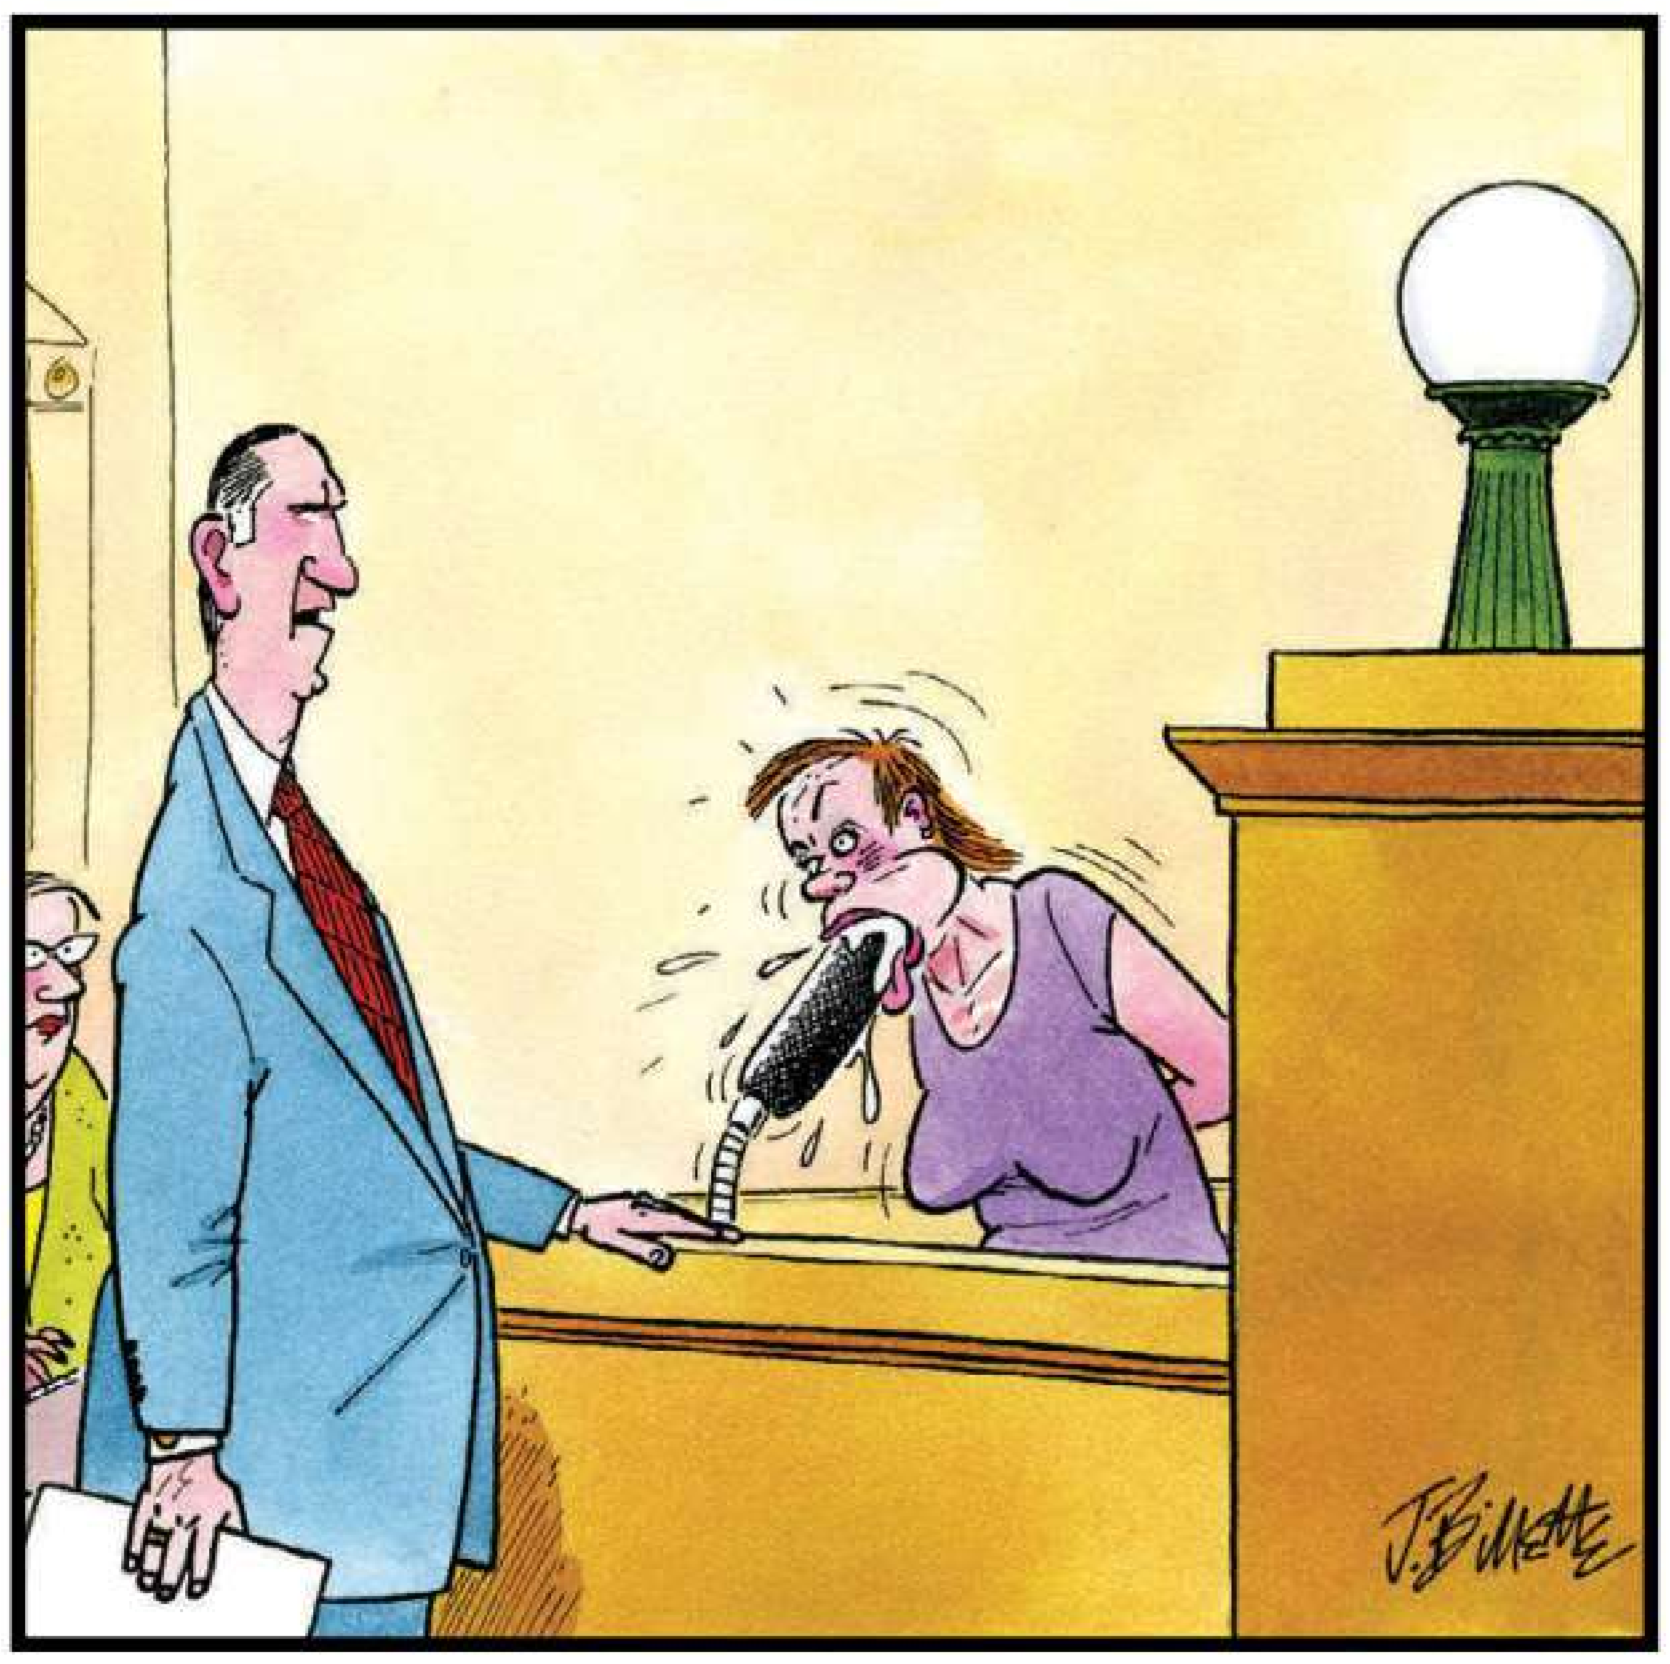
A new study by those groovy cats at the Kinsey Institute suggests that Republicans are all hot-and-bothered for infidelity porn, while their Democratic counterparts gravitate toward the BDSM spectrum, "from bondage to spanking to dominance-submission play."

Lead researcher Justin Lehmiller chalks it up to the appeal of the forbidden. Label something taboo, and it sparks interest. This explains how a right-wing, family-values conservative might be naturally inclined toward a wife-swapping gangbang fantasy scenario. As for Democrats, 2016 showed us just how much liberals love to take a public beating. It seems that all people, regardless or political stripe, share an underlying process: "What connects Republicans and Democrats," Lehmiller believes, "is that their fantasies are at least partly driven by what they can't have."

We're also united by our attraction to anything new to us, be it sexual positions or settings for our fantasies (say reverse cowgirl in the Oval Office). Oddly enough, both Republicans and Democrats are more likely to fantasize about a current partner than a celebrity or nudie star. (Maybe put an asterisk next to Melania, who is somehow all three.)

And while politicians themselves are not a terribly sexy lot, no one who's held office has appeared in more erotic dreams and X-rated imaginings than Alaska's answer to Honey Boo Boo, Sarah Palin. Could our mutual horniness for a failed-politician-turned-failed-reality-TV-star unite a country on the brink? For the answer to this and other burning questions, check out Who's Nailin' Paylin? by calling 800-763-8271 ext. 7651 or visiting HustlerStore.com.

CELEBRITIES ARE HUGE DILDOS



"Your Honor, could you instruct the witness to simply describe the alleged oral assault?"

Did you hear that? It's the sound of goth girls around the world creaming their blacker-than-midnight undies. The catalyst in question is a newish addition to the merch section of gloom rocker Marilyn Manson's online shop: an eight-inch dildo in his likeness. Sadly it does not play "The Beautiful People" at the moment of climax.

According to AltPress.com, the silicone phallus is hypoallergenic and inscribed with the singer's name. Oh, and it also bears his likeness in trademark zombie white, painted with an environmentally friendly coating that, unfortunately, "may fade with multiple uses." It includes a silky black sack for safe storage and a suction cup base—ideal for concerts or the classroom. Yours for only $125.

Manson definitely has his cachet, but there are some faces you never want to see on the end of a sex toy. Lest we forget, the Donald Trump dildo exists, and this is something we all have to come to terms with. Created by the artist known as Hutchtastic, the dildo incarnation of Number 45 is meant as a protest of sorts, though your guess is as good as ours: #Resist?

If crusty orange despots aren't your jam, perhaps you'd be into a cute X-rated iteration of David Beckham ("The Buckham"), LeBron James ("Leboned"), and even The Rock ("Kock"). Made in Australia by the aptly named Celebrity Dildo, they will both delight and amuse. And don't forget the amazing women of Broad City, who launched their own line of custom sex toys—not in their likeness of course, but while we're on the topic, Abbi or Ilana?

Not all celebrities want this kind of attention—especially if the product they're hawking has absolutely nothing to do with stimulating your erogenous zones. Last October Her Royal Madgeesty launched a new facial skin roller that employs carbon technology. The item is part of the pop queen's MDNA SKIN beauty brand and retails for $200. Oh, and it also looks like a high-tech double-headed dildo, a design aspect that did not go unnoticed on social media—"I love Madonna, but are we all just going to not talk about how this thing looks like a vibrater? [sic]"

THE REAL FAKE NEWS: PENCE HEALS NATION WITH PIZZA BAGELS

PITTSBURGH, PA—In the wake of the horrific violence at the Pittsburgh Tree of Life synagogue, Mike Pence made a pilgrimage to the Steel City in hopes of easing the nation's pain. "In addition to the traditional offering of pizza bagels," said a Pence aide, "the Vice President offered to help the Jewish community mourn by staying to sit and shiver."

"Oy, this guy," said Pittsburgh resident Jeffrey Goldblum. "It's called 'sitting shiva.' I can't even. And the bagels—pizza bagels? They have—first of all, bagels aren't some magic death food we eat, and they have pepperoni on them. I mean, this fucking guy. My friend heard him call his wife 'mommy.' I don't judge, but that's kind of creepy."

"Jews don't eat pepperoni?" replied the aide. "Have they tried it? It's really delicious—truly one of God's blessings. Next you'll tell me they don't love Jesus. Jesus was Jewish, wasn't he?"

"Yes, of course," said Goldblum. "Hey, reporter, are you just talking to me and this anonymous aide here? What's the deal? You don't want to, I don't know, get into how Trump's vile rhetoric motivated this monster to massacre 11 people?"

"Yeah," said the unnamed aide, "and why do the American people care what Jeff Goldblum thinks about all this?"

"I'm not that Jeff Goldblum," the resident told our very disappointed reporter.

"Ha, I knew it," said the aide. "Frickin' loser."

AISLE 5, VIBES & BUTT PLUGS

Surprise! Behemoth retailer Walmart—which once banned Cosmopolitan from its shelves for being too edgy—recently decided that it's absolutely fine to stock sex toys. Why? Blame Christian Grey and his playroom. Film, TV and the internet have all served to normalize personal pleasure devices, and this is a good thing—even if the mere mention of Dakota Johnson is enough to make you vomit.

Vox.com reports that Walmart now boasts a penis extender, a hyperrealistic dildo and a vibrating butt plug "designed to look like a puppy tail" online. The change has come to their stores as well, albeit a little more slowly. In October PlusOne's premium sex toys debuted at Walmart stores across the country.

Meanwhile in the U.K., grocery chain Sainsbury's is also cashing in. In November the chain—in partnership with Rocks-Off—launched three bullet vibrators ranging from $10 to $20. Their rationale is altruistic enough: the customer's well-being is in their better interests, so why not do whatever they can to make people feel good? Can bookstores and gas stations be far behind?

But at the end of the day, who do you want to trust with your deepest, most personal moments: an insidious corporation that almost killed our beloved Tracy Morgan or trained professionals whose mission is your total satisfaction? In advance of your next purchase, consider the latter—because HUSTLER Hollywood has your back (and front). Our online and brick-and-mortar stores are judgment-free zones where quality, variety and value intersect. With 28 locations, there may very well be a HUSTLER Hollywood in your neck of the woods, or visit HUSTLERHollywood.com—and maybe think twice about buying your vibes from the same place you purchase your kitty litter.

BONER SCIENCE

In the spirit of "masturbating will make you go blind" or the fabled "hairy palms" myth, "porn-induced erectile dysfunction" is the latest sexual bogeyman to haunt men who dare engage in the carnal twin sins of porn and self-love. Lucky for us libertines, medical professionals have valiantly stepped up to call bullshit on this fake-ass news.

The impetus for clarification goes back to a BuzzFeed article from 2017 titled "This Is How Therapists Treat Young Men With 'Porn-Induced Erectile Dysfunction.'" In it, two men describe their so-called porn addiction and how this has rendered them unable to achieve erection. The testimonials are bookended by quotes from various "experts" chiming in on performance issues resulting from "a high exposure to pornography."

"Not so fast," said the astute editorial team of Men's Health Australia, who connected with two Ph.D. sex researchers in a follow-up piece published in September.

Dr. Nicole Prause, founder of Liberos, a sex research and biotechnology company in Los Angeles, cites three laboratory studies that have shown how "sex film viewing is unrelated to erectile functioning." She goes on to state that "no study has ever linked the two" and insists therapists are "literally manufacturing" the idea that there is a connection between erectile dysfunction and porn. So there.

Dr. Ian Kerner takes it to the hoop with his observation that it's not what you watch or don't watch, but rather how you jerk off that affects performance. We all know exactly what feels good and how to best achieve it, and these personal touches—friction, grip, pressure, etc.—are not always possible or easy to replicate during sex. This, and not your fondness for cum-drenched gangbangs, is likely the culprit.

The good news? "This would be a masturbation issue, not a porn issue, and is somewhat easily resolved," Kerner says.

So grab your lube and cue up that Barely Legal DVD, because the train for Pleasure Town leaves now.

BEAVER OF THE YEAR

PHOTOGRAPHY BY VICTOR LIGHTWORSHIP

It's an honor to be named Beaver of the Year! Winning the contest was a shock for me. There were so many beautiful women nominated that I can't believe I was chosen. When I found out the good news, I celebrated with a shot of Patrón Silver!

"I'm currently living in Nevada at the Bunny Ranch, which is a legal brothel. I've been working here for two years, and it's been an amazing experience so far. I've gained so much confidence knowing that I am helping people with the exact sexual experience they are looking for. I've been told that I've changed boys into men and saved marriages!" >>

"I also own a marijuana dispensary up in Portland, and I have a superstrong work ethic. I really want to be wealthy and comfortable in life, and in ten years I see myself as retired, living someplace with nice weather. Maybe Hawaii! Hawaii has bright blue water and this amazing smell I wish I could wake up to every day. And the food is awesome!

"In my downtime I like to watch gangster thug movies or Family Guy—really anything on Adult Swim—and I love listening to rap music. My top favorite rappers are D-Lo, Mac Dre, Tupac, Cookie Money, Joe Blow and Keak Da Sneak. I've been a fan of rap since I was young. In fact, my most memorable sexual experience took place in a jacuzzi with one of my favorite rappers. I followed a trail of rose petals leading to the bathroom, and when I opened the door, there he was, in a bubble bath with candles lit, smoking a Backwood.

"My ideal date would probably be at the gun range or anything on the water, a boat ride or even jet skiing. I once had sex on a jet ski in the middle of Lake Tahoe! It was just me, my lover and some suntan oil, and the sex was slippery and hot."

DRAIN THE SWAMP?

THE TRUTH BEHIND TRUMP'S BIGGEST LIE

It comes as no surprise when a Republican President appoints corporate-friendly judges to the bench or industry-friendly chiefs to federal regulatory agencies. But Donald Trump has taken this practice to a whole new level of in-your-face graft, collusion and incompetence.

He promised to "drain the swamp." Instead, he's filled it with industry cronies, lobbyists and unqualified amateurs. These corporate imposters gut or refuse to enforce established rules before jumping back into the boardroom to claim their share of the profits. As a result, the revolving door between governmental agencies and big business is now spinning like a nuclear centrifuge.

ARTICLE BY TRAVIS KELLY
ILLUSTRATIONS BY SPENCER AFONSO

In 2009 President Obama established a rule banning anyone who had lobbied for an industry in the past two years from running an agency regulating that industry. As soon as Trump took office, he rescinded that rule. Instead, corporate wolves could now be appointed to office. Yes, they would have to recuse themselves from the specific issues they lobbied for in the past; however, there's a giant loophole—Trump can issue an ethics waiver, allowing even that limited ban to be circumvented. Such waivers are supposed to be public record, but the President has virtually classified them. Journalists and government watchdogs have to file slow and tedious FOIA requests to flush them out of the shadows. It's basically a sneaky end run that totally eviscerates the Obama rule.

Further, Trump and his Republican Congress have used the Congressional Review Act (CRA) like a sledgehammer to smash a host of regulations enacted by the Obama Administration. Signed into law by Bill Clinton in 1996, the CRA allows Congress 60 working days after a new federal agency rule takes effect to review and overturn legislation. The CRA had been used successfully only once, in 2001, before the current administration took office. Now Republican lawyers say that if a rule passed even decades ago was not "submitted to Congress" back then, it can be submitted now and subject to review and repeal. With this new weapon the GOP is poised to dismantle longstanding regulations they abhor. And once a federal rule is invalidated under the CRA, future administrations are barred from ever again enacting a similar rule.

Every time a new President takes office, hordes of experienced employees in the federal government are dismissed and have 75 days to train the new crew of approximately 4,000 political appointees. Then they are prohibited by law from having anything to do with the new guys, who, hopefully, are curious and committed enough to learn the ropes. Unless, of course, they are ideologues who believe that all government is evil and should be abolished. Why learn the ropes if you never intend to sail the ship and would really love to just scuttle it? For example, nearly half of Trump's appointees at the Environmental Protection Agency have blatant conflicts of interests, having worked for, legally represented or lobbied for the industries they're tasked with regulating.

There's another common trait—a large majority of the President's agency appointees demonstrate a visceral hostility to science, as it often undermines their single-minded commitment to stoking corporate profits. Trump is the first POTUS since 1941 not to appoint a science adviser. But ignorance is bliss—and damn profitable if you can bury all the overwhelming evidence that disputes his case for manic deregulation.

Here are some of the more outrageous clown acts performed so far:

THE ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

Trump believes that environmental regulations are shackles on industry and that industry alone will Make America Great Again. As long as short-term profits can be squeezed out of the planet, the long-term health of the soil, air, water and inhabitants be damned.

So Trump went after the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) like Genghis Khan, with warlord Scott Pruitt in charge. After the U.S. withdrew from the universally acclaimed Paris climate agreement, Pruitt announced intentions to repeal Obama's Clean Power Plan, stoke the dirty coal business, gut vehicle fuel-efficiency standards and put a hold on rules aimed at cutting methane emissions from landfills. Power plants are now allowed to dump mercury and other toxins into our rivers and lakes. Overall, Pruitt sought to kill or roll back over 70 environmental regulations. According to an analysis of researchers at Harvard University, those rollbacks could lead to an estimated 80,000 premature deaths per decade and respiratory problems for millions. Incredibly, Trump is even trying to bring back asbestos, allowing it to be used in architecture and product manufacturing on a "case-by-case" basis. Maybe he'll deregulate cyanide, thalidomide and lead next—no doubt, there's profit in those poisons too!

Pruitt is finally gone now, after more than a dozen separate ethics investigations inspired even Congressional Republicans to abandon him. But he set the tone for all of Trump's other lackeys, acting like he was some blue-blood baron in a private castle, spending $43,000 on a soundproof phone booth in his office, $1,500 for 12 custom pens and flying around the world first-class with a platoon of 20 armed guards. Like most GOP capos, he hates wasting taxpayer money—unless it's greasing his skids.

Unfortunately, it's possible that Pruitt's replacement, Andrew Wheeler, will be just as dangerous to our environment, if not more so. He's a former coal lobbyist and onetime top aide to Oklahoma Senator Jim Inhofe, Congress's leading climate change denier.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Not to be outdone by Pruitt, Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke quickly started gilding his own fiefdom. Every day that Zinke arrives at his D.C. office, a staffer climbs to the roof to raise a special secretarial flag, honoring the presence of His Highness. Zinke also racked up a huge bill for first-class jet-setting ($20,000), allegedly to meet with donors and lobbyists, which would be a violation of the Hatch Act.

In September Zinke told a meeting of the Louisiana Oil and Gas Association that "Our government should work for you," and his actions have echoed that sentiment. He promptly got to work, pushing to further open up our coasts to offshore drilling and selling leases to drill in the fragile Arctic. Then he rolled back regulations enacted after the Deepwater Horizon disaster, including a Blowout Preventer Systems and Well Control Rule and requirements for independent safety auditors. Rather than promoting clean, alternative energy, like wave electricity generators, Zinke and Trump want giant offshore oil rigs. The way is now paved for more catastrophes in oceans that are already reeling from the accelerating effects of climate change: increasing acidification, coral bleaching, massively declining fisheries and suffocating plastic pollution.

And they love coal, the dirtiest fuel of all. Zinke canceled a new study on the health effects of mountaintop removal coal mining and burning. Then he blamed California's record season of wildfires on "environmental terrorist groups"—runaway climate change had nothing to do with it!—while calling for more bulldozers to raze carbon-sequestering trees on public lands. Zinke and company want to make the U.S. not just self-sufficient in energy, but an export powerhouse, even if we have to rape our public lands to fill energy stockholders' pockets. Yes, Halliburton, the logging lords and coal barons are all raking in huge profits today, but at the cost of massive environmental degradation that will only become painfully apparent after these raiders are out of office.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Trump's third weapon against the environment is the Department of Energy (DOE). That it's led by former Texas governor Rick Perry, who in a Presidential debate said he wanted to abolish three federal agencies but couldn't remember the third (the DOE), really says it all. Soon >> after Trump's inauguration, Perry's new team stormed aboard, swashbuckling through what they regarded as enemy territory.

"We had tried desperately to prepare them," says Tarak Shah, chief of staff for science and energy at the DOE. "But that required them to show up. And bring qualified people. But they didn't. They didn't ask for even an introductory briefing. Like 'What do you do?'"

The DOE safeguards our nuclear power plants and nuclear weapons arsenal and trains every international nuclear-energy inspector. Along with tracking the proliferation of nuclear materials worldwide and preventing terrorists from obtaining them, these functions account for half of the DOE's budget. From 2009 to 2017, its National Nuclear Security Administration located and sequestered enough enriched uranium globally to make 160 nuclear weapons. But Rick Perry "has no personal interest in understanding what we do…. He's never been briefed on a program—not a single one, which to me is shocking," says another DOE staffer.

If you can't totally abolish a department, as Perry and Trump really want to do, then you just sleepwalk it to death—drain the oil, climb behind the wheel and grind the gears until smoke rises from the hood. One of the projects Perry is hobbling is a low-interest loan program to jump-start alternative energy innovation. Although Republicans trumpeted the demise of Solyndra (a DOE-funded solar company that went bankrupt in 2011), the program has actually turned a profit since its inception in 2009 and has helped 35 solar utility companies get off the ground—exactly what we need to adapt to climate change. Instead Perry has tried to force electricity customers to bail out failing coal and nuclear power companies and proposed eliminating the Advanced Research Projects Agency-Energy program as well as funding for the DOE's national labs, essential to exploring alternatives to finite fossil fuels. Of course, those alternatives might create "unhealthy" competition for Halliburton and pals.

This past August, David Fritch, an Occupational Safety and Health Administration inspector at the closed San Onofre nuclear power plant near San Clemente, California, blew the whistle on a near catastrophe—a 100-ton canister of highly radioactive waste almost crashed to the ground to spill its contents. Fritch noted that the plant's workers "who haven't been around nuclear before, are performing these tasks—not technicians, not highly trained, and not with thorough briefs." There are 99 licensed nuclear power plants in the U.S. With inspections and safety standards trashed, an American Fukushima disaster becomes increasingly likely. When Rick Perry took the reins, the DOE was DOA.

THERE ARE 99 LICENSED NUCLEAR POWER PLANTS IN THE U.S.—WITH INSPECTIONS AND SAFETY STANDARDS TRASHED, AN AMERICAN FUKUSHIMA DISASTER BECOMES INCREASINGLY LIKELY. WHEN RICK PERRY TOOK THE REINS, THE DOE WAS DOA.

DEFENSE NUCLEAR FACILITIES SAFETY BOARD

The Defense Nuclear Facilities Safety Board is a small independent agency created in 1988 after several dangerous lapses in the nation's nuclear facilities were publicized. Its mission is to monitor workplace conditions for the nation's 39,000-strong nuclear workforce and make safety recommendations to the DOE. The Trump Administration's new rules eliminate the Board's authority to inspect nearly three-quarters of nuclear weapons sites, even as we begin a $1 trillion production of new nukes. Private contractors helped draft the new rules to get the federal police off their backs. Yes, safety regulations and inspections cost money, but the price pales next to the costs of treating radiation-induced illnesses and cleaning up a nuclear accident. This is the ultimate penny-wise/pound-foolish policy.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

The wolf guarding this henhouse, former Georgia governor Sonny Perdue, raked in a small fortune in campaign donations from Monsanto and other Big Ag companies. His main advisers include CropLife America (a lobby group for pesticide manufacturers) and Protect the Harvest (a nonprofit opposed to animal rights). His first blow was delaying implementation of new humane standards for poultry and livestock that took ten years to finalize.

Then he transferred the Codex Office, tasked with monitoring food safety, to the Trade and Foreign Agricultural Affairs department, a move that "undermines the whole history that the U.S. has for science-based standards for food," according to Catherine E. Woteki, a former chief scientist who ran the USDA's $3 billion research budget, which includes figuring out how to adapt our food supply to climate change. Trump then nominated Sam Clovis, a right-wing talk radio host from Iowa with no science background at all to be the USDA's top scientist (thankfully, Clovis later withdrew) and staffed other positions with incompetent fools including "a long-haul truck driver, a telephone company clerk, a gas company meter reader, a country club cabana attendant, a Republican National Committee intern and the owner of a scented candle company," according to Michael Lewis, author of The Fifth Risk. This gang's only qualification? All were loyal fanboys of Great Leader Trump. With these jokers running the show, we could soon be starving.

In case you prefer to prep with organic foods, forget it—Big Ag has muscled into the organic business, lobbying to reduce certification standards so almost anything can be marked with the more profitable "organic" label, including a flood of fraudulently designated imported grains. "Big business is taking over the USDA organic program," says >>

Iowa farmer Francis Thicke, "because the influence of money is corroding all levels of our government."

FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

After several disease outbreaks caused by contaminated tomatoes, spinach and other produce, in 2011 Congress expanded the Food and Drug Administration's authority to recall tainted food, inspect produce growers and force them to test irrigation water for pathogens—the biggest advance for food safety in 70 years. But once in office Trump ordered the water-testing rules to be suspended for four years. Six months later romaine lettuce grown in Yuma, Arizona, was contaminated by E. coli bacteria, affecting consumers in 36 states; 210 people were sickened, 27 suffered kidney failure, and five died. Yet Trump has not budged on postponing testing rules that could cost consumers $108 million annually in medical expenses, according to an FDA analysis.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

In December of 2017, Ajit Pai, the stooge running the Federal Communications Commission, repealed net neutrality rules, established under Obama, that guaranteed a level playing field on the internet for all communicators and entrepreneurs—the way the net has operated since its birth. Now ISPs will be able to throttle down certain sites and speed up others who pay for a fast lane, inhibiting competition, innovation and the guarantee of free—and equal—speech for all players. Even though Google, Facebook and other Silicon Valley giants opposed the repeal, Pai lubed the wheels for his telecom cronies to rake in more loot.

> THE WEALTHIEST NATION IN THE WORLD CANNOT AFFORD FOOD SAFETY STANDARDS COMMON EVERYWHERE IN EUROPE. WE CAN AFFORD $1 TRILLION IN NEW NUCLEAR WEAPONS, BUT NOT SAFETY INSPECTORS FOR THEIR PRODUCTION.

CONSUMER FINANCIAL PROTECTION BUREAU

The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau (CFPB) was created to counter the unscrupulous practices of Wall Street banksters and swindles by white-collar loan sharks. Trump's capo here, Mick Mulvaney, stripped the bureau's enforcement powers in racial discrimination cases, dropped cases against predatory payday lenders, eliminated an office dedicated to overseeing deceptive student loan practices and made the once independent bureau hostage to political pressure from Republican congressmen.

The CFPB's new motto might as well be "Free the Sharks!"

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Trump's Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) chairman, Jay Clayton, is a longtime Wall Street lawyer who defended Goldman Sachs and other firms against SEC violations. Ever since 2008, critics have lamented that the Wall Street casino is rigged against small investors, with brokers luring unwitting customers into investments geared more to increasing the brokers' compensation than their clients' wealth. These incentives were at the heart of the deceptively promoted junk mortgage securities that led to the 2008 financial crisis. Clayton has done nothing to curtail them. Total SEC enforcement actions, disclosure requirements and fines have dropped precipitously under his leadership. It's now even easier to fleece the suckers on Main Street.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

In 2016, 2.9 million American workers were injured or sickened on job sites, and nearly 5,200 died. That's about half the incident rate of 1970, the year before the Department of Labor and OSHA implemented strict new workplace rules. Since Trump took office, five advisory councils dedicated to improving worker safety and whistleblower protections have been disbanded or suspended, including ones governing the dangerous construction, maritime and nuclear industries, and reporting requirements for job-related injuries have been scaled way back. Once again the workers Trump pretends to protect are screwed.

The current administration ignores one venerable adage well established throughout human history: An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. The regulations now abolished or crippled were carefully drafted after various frauds, crimes and disasters bankrupted, injured or killed thousands and cost Americans millions of dollars. How many points on the booming stock market are preventable deaths worth?

The wealthiest nation in the world cannot afford food safety standards common everywhere in poorer Europe. We can afford $1 trillion in new nuclear weapons, but not safety inspectors for their production. We frack and burn fossil fuel like it's the 1950s as increasingly destructive droughts, floods, hurricanes and wildfires mark the rapidly changing climate, threatening our food supply as a circus of buffoons manages the Department of Agriculture. And all of this as a new study predicts that the nations most damaged by future climate change will be the United States, India and Saudi Arabia, in that order. This study includes the "social cost of carbon," meaning the total fallout not only for environmental health but also for the economy.

While other nations are smartly adapting to climate change, we worship mammon beyond any concern for future generations, with a cocktail of methane, asbestos, mercury, E. coli and nuclear waste seeping into the nation's bloodstream. Soon enough the chickens will come home to roost, and even Trump's duped supporters will be left paying for the toxic cleanup, bankster bailouts and premature funerals. Their caps might as well be emblazoned with a new acronym: MASA—Make America Sick Again.

AISLING ISOLDE:

TRANSFIGURATION

Shock is in the eye of the beholder, but when Instagram banned the work of Australian artist Aisling Isolde, she gained a new, international audience for her raw, deglamorized eroticism. Come with us on a taboo-breaking journey beyond the hang-ups down under.

INTERVIEW BY MATT HONDA KENNEDY

HUSTLER: What's it like to have your art banned?
AISLING ISOLDE: I did feel rather upset at first, having my own hashtag, #AislingIsolde, banned on Instagram. I think it's been lifted since, but I haven't used it just in case. Using banned hashtags can get you shadowbanned, which is when your content is hidden from new audiences, making it very challenging to grow your following. Did you know the hashtag "curvy" was banned? Ridiculous! It hasn't and never will stop me from creating the art I love.

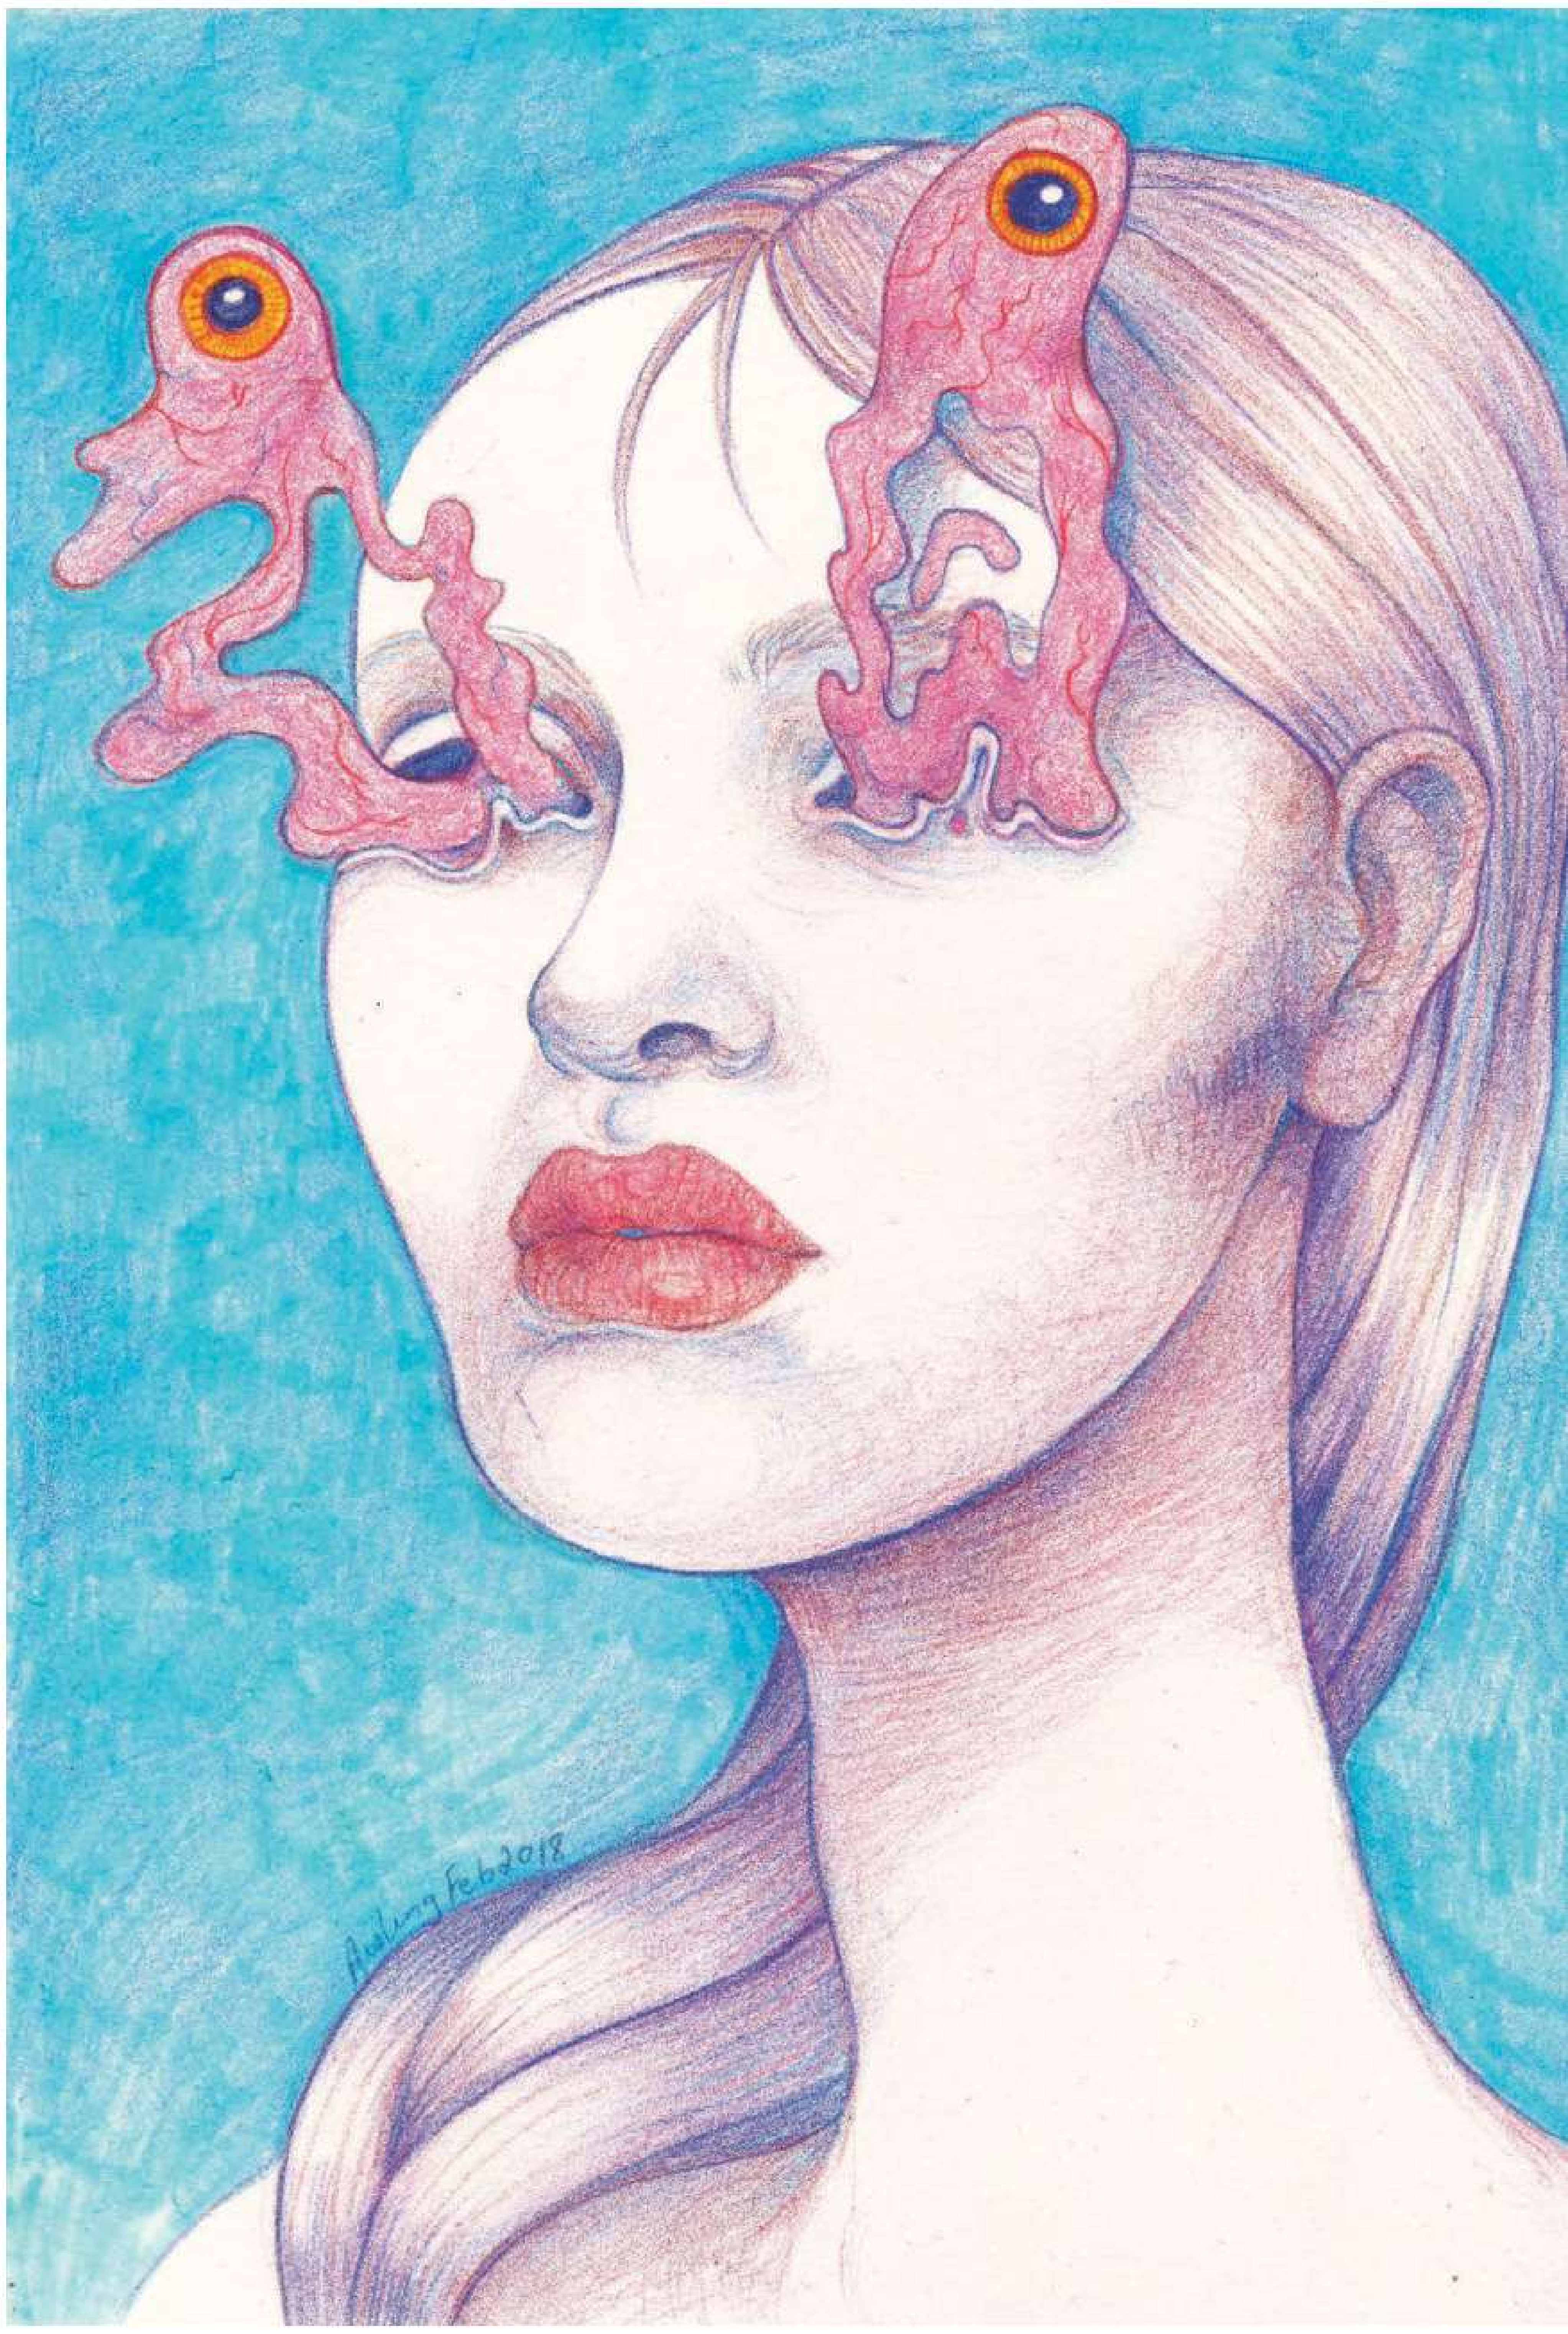
Was there a specific image that got your hashtag banned?
I'm honestly not sure, since they don't actually clarify. Based on the timing, perhaps it was the nude acrobat? There is so much worse out there! Nudity is allowed in art and sculpture, according to Instagram's ambiguous guidelines, but nipples are apparently more offensive than hate speech.

It's strange to see violence and hate speech get a free pass, while female nudity is red-flagged.
I find the double standards incredibly frustrating! I have seen incredibly violent and malicious content on Instagram and most other social media platforms, and rarely have they received any reprimanding. I think the hang-up is that many see nudity as an implication of sexuality. It is an archaic view that is sadly still shared amongst many. We're born naked but quickly taught to be ashamed of our natural selves and cover up. Breasts are not sexual organs, but society has sexualized them. A man can walk topless but a woman cannot. I met a guy who compared breast-feeding in public to shitting in public. How is giving life to a child obscene? When we objectify something, we take away humanity and empathy. And this notion that women must be prim and proper while men are allowed to do whatever the hell they want? Let the girls have fun too.

Did getting banned change your subject matter?
It inspired me to create more cheeky art, in fact. Two examples are one of a woman riding a giant cock and another of a girl in a field of mushroom penises. At one stage I stuck female nipples onto objects such as shampoo bottles just to be a smartass. I will not be silenced.

Have your parents been supportive of your art?
Both of my parents are very creative. My mother is a musician and my father is an artist. They saw me drawing from three years old and have kept encouraging me to create and draw.

At what age did you start thinking about a career in the arts?
My father always loved Dali, so I learned of him when I was very young. I think I was in my late teens when he showed me Hans Bellmer, thinking I would enjoy his delicate line work, and ever since then I have found inspiration in his art. His artwork is sexually charged, but the way his lines flow—so gentle and delicate! Shortly thereafter I discovered DeviantArt, which is a website where people can share their art. Now, there was a whole new world I never knew existed! Since then I have been sharing my art online, which has led to art sales and exhibitions. I don't know that I can claim it as a career per se, since I still have a day job, but as I approach 30, I consider art my real job.



OBJECTIFY ME, PENCIL AND FELT-TIP PEN, 2016 (LEFT)
MY EYES ARE UP HERE, PENCIL, 2018 (RIGHT)

I also see the influence of Egon Schiele and Ernst Fuchs in your work. What is it about their art that appeals to you?
I love Egon Schiele, but Ernst Fuchs is definitely one of my biggest influences. I fell in love with his magical realism and surrealistic ways. I have always believed there is more to this world than we can see. I like to question reality. Is my reality the same as the next person's? Do we have a shared awareness? Of course, we all have a different perspective, and I love the early Symbolists and late Moderns because they really pushed the limits of speculation, questioning what is real and what isn't real. I love it when imagery makes the viewer question the stated obvious. I love things to be magical and whimsical, even >> scary at times. Life isn't all sunshine and daisies. I love using symbology to convey my feelings at that present moment of creation. Not everyone gets it, and that's fine.

Since your work addresses elements of eroticism and self-worth, what do you feel is still considered taboo?
Sexuality is taboo because it is animalistic, and people don't like to be reminded of what we truly are: animals, with basic core instincts like eating, sleeping and, yes, fucking. There are too many places where religion and politics are essentially the same, which encourages a concept of the moral superiority of man over beast, but the only immoral animal I'm aware of is man.

Is it possible in this day and age for art to be offensive?
I think that's subjective. People choose to be offended rather than questioning why it's making them feel uncomfortable. It's so much easier to eliminate something than to question it. It's too much effort for some people. Just because something makes you uncomfortable doesn't mean it should be removed. Censorship is moral violence after all.

"IF YOU WANT TO GUARANTEE INTEREST IN ANYTHING, SIMPLY FORBID IT."

As a woman based in Australia, do you feel that your gender helps or hinders acceptance of your art?
Men still dominate the art world, especially in Australia, but I have seen more female artists slowly rise up in the ranks. This is just my opinion, so I don't speak for every Sydney artist, but I feel like the art schools here are rather prudish compared to other places in the world. I sometimes feel like I would fit a lot better in Albuquerque. When I was visiting the USA, I spent a lot of time in New Mexico. I managed to sell a ton of drawings. Everyone loved my art there! It seems like Americans are a lot more open-minded when it comes to art that's quirky and different. I felt like in America the quirkier you were, the more they loved you. You guys really embrace the weird. Or maybe they just loved me for my accent. Ha! There seems to be a real culture of art patronage in the States compared with Australia—at least in my experience.

Speaking of quirks, what are some of the themes and visual cues that separate your art from most?
Probably the mutilating, the amputation, the deformities and the long, wild limbs. I like using symbols that express a sensation of lack of self or many selves within. I feel like no one has a single solid personality—we always present a different side of us depending who we are with. We usually aren't the same person with our mothers that we are with our friends. There is always something we are hiding or repressing. And even though lovers are friends, are we sharing the same types of intimacies with these two similar but different groups of people? This is something I have always thought about deeply. We present our best selves to our friends, but can be absolute rat bags to others, when it's our friends who are more likely to be accepting of that ugly side. I also like to draw headless women because I sometimes feel rather chaotic about my identity. I find that people have an easier time relating to a physique than to a face, since faces are so very personal. A body can represent a standard, while a face is intricately detailed and unique.

And of course the nudity!
I've read that at one point in art history no women were allowed to be drawn nude! So when you see the paintings and drawings of that era, it was men who posed and were then feminized in the artworks. So bizarre! It seems that men have always love a naked chick, but for long stretches of our history that appreciation of the nude female form has been reserved for private encounters and generally limited to during sex. Otherwise, nudity has been seen as obscene and forbidden. If you want to guarantee interest in anything, simply forbid it. Maybe that's where my interest sprouted…

I got into the adult industry when a director spotted me flashing my tits during a scene in a mainstream movie. I guess they liked what they saw! I got his call soon after, and ever since I've been traveling the world, meeting fun people and shooting steamy sex. It's been a dream!

"Besides my tits, my favorite part of my body is probably my booty, and I definitely know how to shake it. Whenever I go out with my girls, like in Miami or some other hot spot, I wear the tightest, shortest dresses possible, and I watch and laugh as all the boys stare. What those boys don't realize is that I'm more attracted to their mamas! Yeah, that's right. Give me a MILF, and let's party!"

RULES OF ATTRACTION

PHOTOGRAPHY BY TAMMY SANDS

When I was 18, I walked into a sex shop, and I bought my first HUSTLER Magazine. I wanted to look at the gorgeous women inside, and all I can say is, I wasn't disappointed! At the time I was a wild child, but I've mellowed out since then. These days I'm more quiet and settled, and I enjoy the little things in life, like spending time with friends or being outdoors. I'm attracted to stability, and my idea of a perfect partner is someone who is loyal, driven and hardworking. Oh, and someone who doesn't have a ton of body hair. That's a bit of a turnoff."

—Kiera

My parents were hippie types. They'd burn sage in our house and take me to drum circles. They raised me to be spiritual. They know I model and do girl-on-girl scenes, but they're fine with me displaying my sexuality. Our bodies should not be shamed! I'm attracted to boys and girls, and I see myself as a girl next door. I'm down-to-earth and live an athletic lifestyle. There's nothing better than going wakeboarding or snowboarding—and then fucking with all those sports endorphins rushing through your body." —Elle

ONCE, DURING A TRIP TO DALLAS, I FELL HARD FOR A GAL NAMED ALICE. WE JUMPED INTO BED, AND SOON WE WERE WED. NOW ALICE IS QUEEN OF MY PHALLUS.

Olaf Swenson, out in his pasture in northern Minnesota, took a quick kick from a cow right to his crotch. Writhing in agony, he fell to the ground. As soon as Olaf could manage, he went to the doctor. "How bad is it, Doc?" he gasped. "I'm getting married next week, and my fiancée, Lena, is still a virgin."

The doctor told him, "I'll have to put your penis in a splint to let it heal and keep it straight. It should be okay next week, but leave it on as long as you can." The doctor then took four tongue depressors, wrapped them around Olaf's wiener and taped it all together—quite an impressive work of art.

Not mentioning any of this to Lena, Olaf married her, and they went on their honeymoon to Duluth. That night in their motel room, Lena ripped off her wedding dress to reveal her untouched breasts and unpenetrated twat. "Olaf, you're the first one!" she exclaimed. "No has ever seen these."

Olaf immediately dropped his pants and announced, "Look at this, my darling. It's still in the crate!"

The owner of a golf course in Georgia was confused about paying an invoice, so he decided to ask his assistant for some mathematical help. He called her into his office and said, "You graduated from the University of Georgia, and I need some help. If I were to give you $20,000, minus 14%, how much would you take off?"

The assistant thought a moment and then purred, "Everything but my earrings."

Question: What did the leper say to the hooker?

Answer: Keep the tip.

A carpenter was about to put a nail into the church roof when he accidentally hit his thumb with the hammer. "Goddammit, I missed!" he yelped.

From down below the church's pastor fired back, "You shouldn't say that! Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain!"

"Why not, Reverend?!" the carpenter sneered. "Will I be struck by a bolt of lightning or something?"

"Yes, you might be," the pastor warned.

A moment later there was a terrific flash as a lightning bolt shot down from the sky. It whizzed by the carpenter and struck the pastor dead. Seconds later a voice from above boomed out, "Goddammit, I missed!"

A retiree from Florida sent us a cockamamie email: The frequency of sexual activity of senior males depends on where they were born. Findings were just released by Statistics Canada and a United Nations health agency. They revealed that American men between 60 and 80 years of age will, on average, have sex once or twice a week, whereas Japanese men, in exactly the same age group, will have sex only once or twice a year, if they are lucky. This news came as a shock to me and my golf buddies, as none of us had any idea that we were Japanese.

The HUSTLER Dictionary defines bigamy as: two rites making a wrong.

One night young Timmy walked into his parents' bedroom, where his father was sitting on the side of the bed and sliding on a condom. Attempting to hide his erection and the rubber, the father bent over and pretended to be looking for something under the bed.

"What are you doing, Dad?" Timmy asked.

"Oh, uh, I thought I saw a rat run under the bed," the father replied.

"What are you gonna do?" Timmy hissed. "Fuck it?!"

ARTIE LANGE:

WHISTLING PAST THE GRAVEYARD

Artie Lange spent the better part of nine years as Howard Stern's sidekick and today is a regular on Judd Apatow's HBO show Crashing. His newest best-seller, Wanna Bet? A Degenerate Gambler's Guide to Living on the Edge, recounts the hilarious highlights of Lange's life, as well as the lowlights, including drug busts and jail stints. HUSTLER recently spent 90 rollicking minutes with the fabulous funnyman in his Hoboken penthouse to learn how the hell he survived.

INTERVIEW BY T.S. FARLEY

HUSTLER: Your new book is packed with stories! For instance, you know Trump?

ARTIE LANGE: He's a guy I roasted once, and I golfed with him. If you google the roast, it's from 2004, and he's laughing at all these gay jokes, these racist jokes. And the fact he's gonna be President 12 years later—Jesus Christ! After the roast we golfed. I've got the funniest picture ever—me, Eli Manning and Trump. I mean, I'm not political, but Trump's a fun guy to hang out with. Maybe you don't want him dating your sister or something. Or running the country! But Trump proves this country is so great in that we can vote out politicians and vote in a game show host.

Look, I'm a kid from North Jersey, an Italian kid. I didn't go to college. I am a rogue comic. Nothing offends me. So yeah, he's a fun guy to hang out with. There were girls that looked like whores around. We were saying shit to each other on the golf course, busting balls like we'd known each other since the third grade. He was making fun of the fact that I'm a shitty golfer. I'm like, "I wasn't some asshole rich kid learning how to golf when I was 16. I was Sheetrocking a bathroom!" Trump kept calling Eli a fag. And Trump and my father said the exact same thing to me: "You swing like a cunt."

Your father was a big Stern fan?

He turned me on to him. He installed TV antennas back when they used them, and in about '82, eighth grade, the first year Howard was on, my father said, "You're coming to work with me tomorrow. You gotta hear this guy." Then later he fell and became a quadriplegic. My old man died when I was 22, when I was just a drunk and a gambler. If he knew I ended up a cohost on The Stern Show, it would be like I was a senator to him. The only thing that made him laugh sometimes, as a quadriplegic, was Stern.

You worked as a longshoreman back then?

Yeah, I'm a rare stand-up—didn't go to college, very, very blue collar. On MADtv, the first cast was eight of us, but they were all Northwestern, Yale drama, and I was literally unloading an orange juice ship two years before. I just rolled the dice and got something in comedy. Quincy Jones was a producer on MADtv and had the same story, not a lot of education. He was like a second father to me. Quincy saved my life early on, sent me to rehab. He said, "You're a funny cat, man." He'd actually say "cat." The first time I ever rode in a private jet, I was in rehab, and I was coming back from New York, and Quincy says, "How you getting back to L.A.?" I'm like, "I got a plane ticket," and he says, "Fuck that, man, we got the wings! I got Warner Bros. to fucking give us the jet, man!" I'm like, "The jet? I was just on the bus!"

I'm in a limousine with Quincy Jones in January '96. He was the editor of Vibe magazine at the time, and Biggie and Tupac were on the cover. He says to his assistant, "These two motherfuckers are both gonna be dead in a year if they don't stop this bullshit." I swear to God that came out of his mouth! He goes, "I gotta talk to both them motherfuckers, just me and them. First of all, Tupac, he ain't no thug! When he was a teenager, he was drinking mai tais at Punky Brewster's pool party! Punky Brewster! And Biggie Smalls is trying to get out of this shit, like Sinatra and me. Artie, you're a guinea, yeah? I told Sinatra, 'You're away from the guineas. I'm away from the niggas. That's what we're supposed to do!'"

"I THOUGHT, I GOTTA TRY WHAT KIND OF BLOW THE RAMONES GET, AND IT WAS ROCK STAR COCAINE. I WAS HUGGING PEOPLE AT THE URINALS AT THE PORT AUTHORITY, TELLING PEOPLE ON THE BUS I WAS GONNA BE PRESIDENT. I THOUGHT I COULD FLY."

Was he right about them being dead?

September '96 Tupac went, that was eight months later, and a year and two months later they were both dead. Quincy said, "They're fucking with the wrong people. You can't bring Crips into it." So he was right, yeah. And who else should you listen to but him?

I got into L.A. County jail once, for possession, and he called up and said he had juice at the jail. I got my own cell, and the guard says, "I don't know who the fuck you know, but you're getting your own shower." I go to Quincy, "Thanks, man, having your own shower here is the greatest thing ever." I asked him how come he has so much juice, and he just said, "I produced Thriller." I said, "That should be your answer to every question."

Not to be nosy, Artie, but there's a big hole on your living room wall where it looks like a TV used to be.

Yeah, a drug dealer has it. I was out of money, so I took a picture of the TV and sent it to the guy. I got probably $30 worth of heroin for it, a $2,000 fuckin' TV! Him and two brothers come in, and I go, "What do I get for it?" He goes, "A couple of bundles." I go, "A couple of bundles? It's a flat-screen HD!" But there was no way to haggle.

I got a story for you! I don't know if I've ever told this story…or maybe it's in the book? Anyways, I was in Cleveland, Ohio, and I was in bad withdrawals, and I didn't think I was gonna make the plane. So a kid, a heroin addict, recognized me and said, "I got a dealer in Akron." So then I'm in this kid's Fiat, all scrunched up, driving from Cleveland to Akron in the snow. At this point I'm like, What am I doing? I'm technically sort of a celebrity, but I'm famous for being a heroin addict! So we get to Akron and pull up at this drug dealer's house, and they have names or different sayings on the bags of heroin. I didn't go in, but the kid says his guy has two celebrity names: Bobby Brown and Artie Lange. Okay?! The kid couldn't believe it. He goes, "That's fuckin' unbelievable. See if you can get free heroin!" I go, "What are you talking about? He doesn't recognize me." So the kid goes in and starts to explain to the dealer, "The guy whose name is on the heroin is outside!" The dealer looks out at me in the car and then screams at the kid, "Nigga, that ain't Bobby Brown!" That's the funniest thing I ever heard in my life. Then the kid, he's a 21-year-old comedy fan, on the drive back to Cleveland, he says to me, without any irony at all, "You've achieved so much."

You say in the book you were one of the funnier guys in your high school but not in the top 100 of funniest black kids.

I'm telling you, I went to school with about 20 black kids that are funnier than every comedian I've ever met in my life. To this day there's still a couple of kids I talk to, and I say, "Just get onstage and try it!" It's the fear of being onstage that keeps 'em off. Well, that and warrants! Yeah, one kid wouldn't do it because he was like, "I don't want people knowing where I am." A lot of these amazing black comics, like Earthquake—if you google him, he's brilliant—a lot of these guys have these different names because they don't want people knowing their real names. Earthquake's so fucking funny! He's talking on the HBO special about John Kerry being married to Teresa Heinz, and he goes, "Why would you work?" He goes, "If I was married to Teresa Heinz, why you wanna be President? Shit, my bitch own ketchup! Every time people go in a restaurant, ka-ching!" I mean, "My bitch own ketchup"? That's the best punch line of all fucking time.

But yeah, a bunch of the kids I went to school with, they became cops or firemen and stuff or worked construction. As I made it a little bit on Stern—like one time I'd won a bet with Tommy Lee, so I got to squeeze Carmen Electra's tits on air—I'd get voicemails from kids I went to high school with, out there on a construction site, freezing their asses off and building a deck, while I'm getting a million a year to squeeze tits. I'd get messages like, "You were dumber than me in high school. What the fuck happened?" I'd go, "I don't know. I took a shot!" I was loading trucks in two-degree weather, and I said, "I'll try to get onstage!"

You were working on the docks in the early '90s, before you tried comedy?
This was '91, '92. I saved up enough money to give my mother some scratch. I put about seven grand in the bank, and I told her, "Look, I'm 23 years old. Give me four years, the time it would have taken to go to college, and if in four years I don't make it, I'll go back to the pier." Three and a half years later I was on MADtv, and I haven't had another job since. MADtv led to Dirty Work, and Dirty Work led to Stern.

"I HAD SO MUCH FUN WITH HOWARD. WHEN THE STERN SHOW ROLLED INTO THE HARD ROCK IN VEGAS, IT WAS LIKE BEING IN THE ROLLING STONES. I WOULD TRIP AND LAND IN PUSSY. I FUCKED 11 STRIPPERS IN FOUR DAYS."

One of your first stand-up gigs was at CBGB?
Yeah, the first time I ever booked a gig was 1992. Hilly Kristal's wife had a gallery next door to CBGB, and she did improv shows, stand-up. So I tried out, and she liked me, and it was the first time someone ever called to book me for a gig. It was 20 bucks, but the Ramones were playing next door. They did a reunion show, the press was all over the place, and this guy got cocaine from Dee Dee Ramone. Right from him! I thought, I gotta try what kind of blow the Ramones get, and it was rock star cocaine. CBGB was on First Street, and I walked to get on the bus at 42nd. I tell ya, it took me four minutes. I was speed walking, hitting my head, bang, bang. I was hugging people at the urinals at the Port Authority, telling people on the bus I was gonna be President. I thought I could fly. I thought, He shoots this shit? And if you see Dee Dee Ramone, he looked 80 when we was about 35. Yeah, I don't think I've got better cocaine since.

You remember any of the jokes you told that night?
The one joke I still do sometimes, probably one of the ones I first wrote: "I drink so much that eventually I pass out, and when I wake up, I'm naked in a police car with two cops. But the weird part is, I'm always driving." That's one of the first jokes that got a laugh.

That's funny! I didn't see the "I'm driving" part coming.
Yeah, that's a sign of a good joke, if someone can't see it coming. I do another joke, but it's hard with the whole politically correct thing. I say, "I saw a midget on TV complaining that calling a little person 'midget' is the same thing as calling a black person 'nigger.'" I say, "I thought that was interesting, so I went out today and tried both things, and let me tell you, there's a huge fucking difference. One will get you smacked in the shin, and one will get you locked in a trunk of an Impala. So the lesson, people, is never, ever call a black person 'nigger,'" and then I go, "unless they're a midget."

That's a lot going on!
Colin Quinn said that's his favorite stand-up joke of all time.

In the book you mention doing a stand-up show that seriously offended the executive producer of Sex and the City.
I didn't know it was him! I was doing an HBO showcase at the St. Regis in Aspen, and I didn't realize it, but Sex and the City's whole cast is there and Michael Patrick King, the gay guy who ran it all, and somebody yelled something in that general direction. So I said, "I smell dick. Did you burp?" At Michael Patrick King! Not just a gay guy, the head gay guy! And sitting next to him is Sarah Jessica Parker, and I go, "Your wife must have farted." The oldest, hackiest joke you could say at, like, the Cleveland Nuthouse, I say at an HBO showcase to Michael Patrick King. You hear "Oooooh," and he walks. The whole Sex and the City cast got up, and they left. After the show my manager came back and says, "We gotta leave." I go, "The hotel?" He says, "No, I think we have to leave Aspen." I lost every possible deal, but when I was still on Stern, it didn't matter. I still had a job on Howard! I didn't care about show business because if it was a great story for The Stern Show, that's all I needed.

Is the Apple thing in the book?

I don't recall an Apple thing in the book.
Okay, Tim Cook, the new Apple guy, is a gay guy, and he's there with his partner. I was getting 15 grand for an hour's set at Apple. Thirty seconds into the set I go, "Tim Cook is so respected in the gay community that his cum is known as Apple sauce." Tim Cook doesn't look happy, and you hear, "Oooooh," but his gay partner is doubled over laughing; the sales guys are laughing. Then I go, "And his urine is apple juice." After the "s" sound in juice, two security guys have me by the arms and are like, "You gotta leave," and they swooped me out to a helicopter to take me out of Seattle. I don't know if I ever would've recovered from "Apple sauce" anyways, but literally a minute and a half into an hour set and I was gone. But God bless managers, he got my 15Gs.

But you didn't care as long as you were on Stern?
Didn't matter as long as I had a story for Howard. I was getting paid a million bucks a year just to act like a retard on that show, and I'm not a good preparer. Whatever comes off the top of my head is probably as good as it's gonna get. I'm all right at stand-up, I'm all right at sketches, writing books and shit. But I know that show was the most funny I am. Jeff Ross always said roasting people was his Yankee Stadium, but my Yankee Stadium was being on the radio. And I found that out on the biggest show of all time, when my hero gave me a job.

I had so much fun with Howard. When The Stern Show rolled into the Hard Rock in Vegas—we did this three years in a row—it was like being in the Rolling Stones. I would trip and land in pussy. A retard could have got laid, and I made up for lost time. As I say in the book, I fucked 11 strippers in four days, and, uh, my mother thinks you can get AIDS from buying an Elton John record.

I was on The Stern Show the last four years of regular radio and the first four years of Sirius, and people say it's the best radio of all time. We just let loose. It was before political correctness really took over, when everything went. It was the craziest, most fun radio ever.

Do you think the new Stern Show has gone soft?

What pisses me off about the new Stern Show is the guy can do whatever he wants. It's Howard! The one guy who's that big in the media, who could have said, "Fuck you all. I'm not changing. I'm not saying your stupid new words. I'm doing whatever I used to do, putting broads on the Sybian on-air. It's rock and roll still." Instead he, of his own volition, changed. He's gone back and re-edited, like I'm edited out of a lot of bits. He's going back and editing out gay bits, where he's taking out the lisp in his voice. Like, what the fuck are you doing? Twenty-year-old bits? I couldn't be on the show now. I listen now, and every instinct I have I'd get fired for.

But Howard started off saying the most off-the-charts inappropriate things.

He did that on purpose, and that's how he got to be a billionaire! But look, Howard gave me the best job of all time. I love him. I'm just disappointed as a fan, not a coworker, but I would have liked to have seen Howard like Hunter S. Thompson. He was a guy who his whole life seemed rebellious, and then, when he got to the table, when he could have been in with all the celebrities, he still said, "Fuck you!" Howard got to that table at Jennifer Aniston's wedding and sat down next to Orlando Bloom and had a bromance. I'm sorry, but that makes me want to throw up.

There's a lot of outrage about comedy these days, and did I hear you had to apologize for a joke?

No, I refuse to do that! Maybe to an individual. Okay, there's a black girl who I think is stunningly beautiful on ESPN named Cari Champion, and once I said on Twitter that I wanted to be Thomas Jefferson or one of the fat Founding Fathers, and she would be a slave whipping me as I jerked off, and then she'd escape, and I'd come. Okay, so I apologized to her directly. I'm not apologizing to the assholes mad about it. I said, I want to point out, instead of apologizing, that I only ejaculate after she escapes! So what I'm saying is a black person getting their freedom makes me come, and if you have a problem with that… But my agent calls me back and says, "That apology ain't working."

They want a pound of flesh from you! And the pound of flesh they got from me then is I wasn't allowed to do Chris Hardwick's faggy show. I was supposed to go on that night, a bunch of us D-list New York comedy festival celebrities, @midnight, and like two hours before the car comes, they said, "They're not letting you on because of the tweet." I'm like, "I don't give a fuck. As a matter of fact, you just made my night 'cause now I can watch my $10,000 bet on a basketball game instead of going on to witty it up with Chris Hardwick." I didn't care one bit I lost that appearance, but I did hate that they got something.

In the book you mention doing a lot of gambling with Norm Macdonald, but you say he has a lot more money than you.

I was talking about at the time we first met he had more money. Now I don't know. Sometimes Norm and I pass each other going up and down the celebrity wealth list. But I've lost a ton through my demons, ya know. I've tallied up what I've spent on vices, and it is a bad figure. Like I do a joke in my act saying, "I'm somewhat bilingual from buying coke off a Spanish guy in the Bronx for ten years." I said, "It's a fun way to learn another language, but it's a bit pricey. And you don't learn the whole language. Rosetta Stone you learn the whole Spanish language for $49.99. I learned two sentences for a hundred grand in cash. And the two sentences could only be good in a coke deal. 'How much for an 8 ball?' and 'Was this ever in your ass?'" The money I spent, on drugs, bad women, alcohol, gambling, fuhgetaboutit.

You're on probation now and have to be clean for the next five years. So do you have any remaining vices?

Look, I'm not gonna lie to you, heroin and coke are a real problem. Right now I have three weeks clean, but I would be doing a disservice to clean people to call myself clean. And I still gamble all the time.

MORNING, NOON OR NIGHT

PHOTOGRAPHY BY
LARRY FLYNT PRODUCTIONS

The best things about living in California? Sunshine and hot guys, especially surfer boys! I hang out by the beach whenever I can and keep healthy by meditating and practicing yoga. I would say that I'm a pretty happy, bubbly person, and I think it's because I work hard to relax and clear my mind. One of the ways I do that is by having lots and lots of sex. I think it's one of life's greatest stress relievers. I can have sex morning, noon or night. As long as my partner and I have chemistry, I'm down to fuck! Rough sex is especially pleasurable. I want him to stick his dick in my mouth, then ram my pussy hard."

CAUGHT MY STEPSISTER MASTURBATIING

HUSTLER VIDEO. DIRECTOR: ANTON SLAYER. STARRING: LUNA RIVAL, BOBBI DYLAN, MAYA BIJOU, MONICA SAGE, BRAD KNIGHT, LOGAN PIERCE, SETH GAMBLE & JUAN "EL CABALLO" LOCO.

Self-pleasuring sex kittens get a helping hand—and other body parts—from their faux-bros in Caught My Stepsister Masturbating, a testament to siblings from blended families coming together in the best way possible. Auburn-haired Luna Rival, who sports an unkempt crotch bramble, pearish tits and an accent that lands somewhere between France and the San Fernando Valley, is shut down by her stepbrother when she asks to play video games with him. Naturally, she does the next best thing and retires to her bedroom to jostle the button between her legs. Her step-kin eventually checks in on her, and in short order she's working his joystick like a pro. Dude looks like an underfed John Krasinksi, but definitely gets the job done, then scores bonus points for decorating Rival's full bush with a full load of jism. Dirty blonde Bobbi Dylan, who thankfully doesn't resemble her musical namesake, initially taunts her stepbrother like a child, but soon sucks like an experienced woman when he catches her jilling off in the tub. If more exotic fare puts the bloat in your scrote, Maya Bijou will do the trick; she's not dissimilar to Fast Times-era Phoebe Cates. In a pleasing reversal of that film's iconic spank-scene, Bijou is the one who's walked in on while in the middle of masturbating. Bijou is as flexible as she is attractive, going knees-to-chin with a gymnast's pliability as she's pummeled with blood-bone by her faux-sibling. Caught My Stepsister Masturbating will make your prick stand up for a round of one-handed applause. To order, call our new DVD hotline at 800-763-8271 ext. 7651, or visit HustlerStore.com. —Pico D. Ribibi

ANAL CASTING

As with the mainstream entertainment industry, porn has its own backdoor paths to success. Anal Casting explores those warm, squishy alternate channels one colon-punishing thrust at a time. We begin with wide-eyed beauty Gia Derza, who sports a full, sweaty booty that shimmies and ripples gloriously, like a majestic seascape. The video bills itself as "introducing" Derza, and while this might or might not be her first time at the rump rodeo, her sphincters certainly grip her partner's cock firmly in the rectal equivalent of a power handshake. Derza's face contorts into Exorcist-like expressions as her ass is pounded with penis and balls slap her pussy with "attaboy" enthusiasm. Eventually her shitpit is stretched so wide that you could probably hear the ocean if you pressed your ear to it. Jessica Rex is a touch haggard, empty-headed and attention-starved, but she's last-call passable. She looks like Julianna Margulies, except with a butt plug planted between her nether cheeks. Rex is paired up with Manuel Ferrara, so the results are predictable—he beats up her asshole like a loan shark who still hasn't been paid after three tries collecting. Bright-eyed brunette Emily Willis is a breath of fresh, ass-scented air, especially for viewers who like their spank fodder on the just-ripe side. Willis looks like the lost Jenner sister who decided to go into porn, and it doesn't hurt that her tight little asshole peeks out from between her modest cheeks like a teddy bear's button nose. All in all, Anal Casting is worth breaking out your rod for. —P.D.R.

DIRTY TALK 6

JULES JORDAN VIDEO. DIRECTOR: MANUEL FERRARA. STARRING: ALINA LOPEZ, KISSA SINS, GINA VALENTINA, CARMEN CALIENTE & MANUEL FERRARA.

Guys don't typically watch porn to hear what women have to say. But since this is Dirty Talk 6, it seems appropriate to concentrate on the things coming out of these chicks' mouths as well as the things going into their bodily orifices. This potty-talking POV offering kicks off with svelte, taut-assed brunette Alina Lopez, who has the face of Megan Fox and the tongue of Gene Simmons. Aside from wrapping itself around the stiff prick that's presented to it, that tongue gets a workout with some free-flowing toilet-talk. "I wanna lick your dick till it's soaking wet. My mouth is watering for it. I just want to drool all over your dick. Get it nice and wet so you can slide it into my pussy," Lopez declares. But enough of the Sunday sermon, Sister Alina. What else is on your mind? "I want to keep fucking you and keep making me come until I pass out," Lopez adds. Knobby-kneed and slightly rough-faced, Kissa Sins is less aesthetically blessed than Lopez, but she blurts out what's arguably the most poetic line of this offering, telling the camera, "I can feel my heartbeat in my clit." Suck on that, James Joyce! With her smoky eyes, tattoos and nose ring, enticing brunette Gina Valentina comes across like a debased Eva Longoria, though Longoria never uttered a line like this on Desperate Housewives: "I want to feel your cock right there. Shove it all the way down my throat!" Dirty Talk 6 will have tongues wagging, in a good way. —P.D.R.

VALENTINA ROSE

"I love being nude so I can show off my artwork," declares ink aficionada Valentina Rose, 23, from Miami, Florida. "HUSTLER is a great opportunity to do that." Let's get to know a little more about the 5-foot-1 bombshell. "I was born in Sinaloa, Mexico," Valentina divulges, "and I'd describe myself as down-to-earth and fun-loving. I cammed for a while, and I'm now focusing on alt modeling. In my spare time I like anything from spontaneous trips to the Caribbean to a calm night at home painting. I'm also into mountain biking, skating, comedy horror movies and metal bands. I will forever be a fan of Deftones and Korn." When it comes to the greatest pastime of all, Valentina fesses up, "I'm a curious, submissive woman who's not afraid to explore my sexuality. I'll try anything, but my favorite activity is giving blowjobs. I always challenge myself on how far I can take a cock down my throat. The fucking position that gets a cock the deepest inside me is reverse cowgirl. I love riding a guy." —Photos by Friend

Twitter: @ValentinaRose69

"One of my sexual fantasies is being in an all-girl orgy. Another is getting hired for a porno in which I'm surrounded by men who completely cover me in cum."

"I fantasize about having sex while floating around in the International Space Station."

CRYSTAL RUSH

"I am in love with Larry Flynt," reveals Crystal Rush, 30, a Russian-born gym trainer from Hollywood, California. "I know about him from The People vs. Larry Flynt movie. He's an awesome man, and it's a big honor for me to be in his magazine." Crystal's hobbies are dancing, exercising, hiking, traveling and "listening to people to help me better my English." The 5-foot-4 newbie also enjoys listening to music—primarily Rednex, Roxette, Nirvana, Massive Attack and Filipp Kirkorov—and watching TV's Shameless. Crystal personifies shameless. "I'm a lazy-ass, sensitive kitty," she admits. "I love all types of sexuality, and I prefer to be submissive because it's easy to do nothing and get pleasure. I love men, but I sometimes play with girls; they are so soft and sweet. I try to seduce my man to have a threesome so I can see how he fucks the other woman." Crystal adds, "I love to be watched while having sex, and my fetish is balls—kissing and touching them for a long time." —Photos by J. Ellis Cox

"I love being watched when I'm naked. Thank you for publishing my sexy pictures in your awesome magazine!"

LIL MIZZ UNIQUE

"I hope your readers will be excited seeing me naked," says Lil Mizz Unique, 27, an aspiring model from Chicago, Illinois. "I'm excited getting this opportunity." Nailing the classic Beaver Hunt poses—with a bush to boot—the Windy City babe gives us a tantalizing peek at her 5-foot-5 body. Here's a smattering of her own personal observations. "I'm easygoing and open-minded," Lil Mizz Unique tells us. "My hobbies are hiking, traveling, going to car shows, relaxing in hot tubs and, of course, shopping. I watch baking shows on TV because I love to bake, and my favorite movie is The Fast and the Furious because I love fast cars." Of course, Lil Mizz Unique savors sex: "I'm bi, steamy, passive or aggressive—I like to mix it up—and ready to try anything and add new people. I really enjoy getting it on with a man and another woman together. I love oral sex, my fave position is on top, and anal is fun too. I love it all."

“I love traveling, and that has me fantasizing about having sex on every continent.”

SASHA ROSE

"I'm a cheerful, positive, sweet, adventurous, feisty and gregarious girl with a heart of gold," asserts Sasha Rose, 26, from Sacramento, California. "You're guaranteed to love me." The 5-foot-7 skin-mag rookie, who once worked at a clothing store, is stoked to be taking off all of hers in our mag. "Who doesn't love a beautiful nude body?" Sasha coos. "I'm comfortable enough in my own body to let others enjoy it, especially if it can be beneficial for everyone." Besides noting the eye candy aspect of nudity, Sasha is coyly alluding to her sex life, which has been magnified since she became a legal courtesan at northern Nevada's Sagebrush Ranch. "It's the perfect job for a hopeless romantic with a dirty mind," Sasha raves. "I'm kinky and always ready for a sexy time! Gentle or rough, I love it all. Doggy-style is my absolute favorite position, and threesomes are extra-fun. I like to use my famous three-tongue-fold on men and the ladies." The fan of Stan Lee's Marvel movies and vampire fare explains, "I can twist my tongue so it looks like a three-leaf clover." —Photos by Friend

“My fantasy is being blindfolded, tied up and naked in a room at a hotel near a beach. A man walks in, and I can hear the crashing waves while he licks me from head to toe, then leaves me a bag of cash and walks out, never to be seen.”

ZARA

HUSTLER CLASSIC
MAY 1992

PHOTOGRAPHY BY JAMES BAES

A little leather goes a long way for Zara Whites, tanned-hide star of the French fuck flick Reves de Cuir—pardon our French—Dreams of Leather.

Zara matches the least with the most. Take a look at the next best thing to wearing nothing at all.

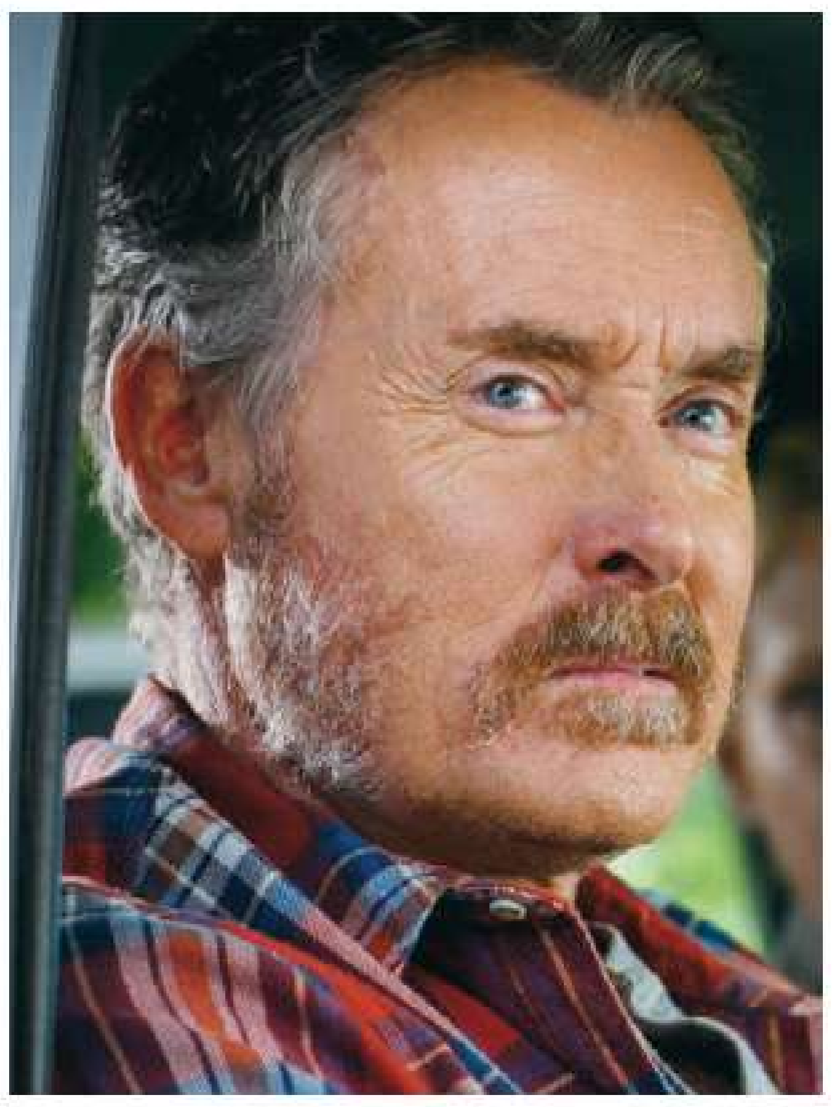
THE APRIL ISSUE GOES ON SALE FEBRUARY 12, 2019 | VISIT OUR WEBSITE AT HUSTLERMAGAZINE.COM



JOHN C. McGINLEY

He's scored powerful roles in Oliver Stone films, and he's adored for his wisecracking characters in Office Space, Scrubs and now Stan Against Evil. John C. rang us up recently to talk about lifting weights underwater, cornholing (the game, silly!) and what it really means to be in the Malibu Mob. Interview by T.S. Farley.

STRIPPER CONFIDENTIAL

Stripping is the toughest job you'll ever love (sorry, Peace Corps). So say these diverse and dedicated dancers—no filter, no bullshit, in their own words. It's time to listen and give credit where credit is due. Confessions curated by John Blaylock. Photo courtesy Gemma.

BLINDFOLDED BEAUTIES

They say that when you're blindfolded, every sense is heightened. Take sex to the next level—and then ten levels after that—with voluptuous beauties Kylie Page, Natasha Nice, Ella Knox and Kendra Spade. Photography courtesy HUSTLER Video.
